

DIVERSITY COLLOQUIUM

Child Maltreatment, Race, & Internalizing Problems: Evidence of a Mental Health Paradox?

Presenter: Ashleigh Kysar-Moon

Tuesday, March 20
7-8:30 p.m. | Scholar Space, Rod Library

Join Assistant Professor Ashleigh Kysar-Moon for a discussion on diversity, child maltreatment and mental health. Health disparities scholars describe the existence of a mental health paradox; specifically, when black adults have higher levels of stress exposure compared to whites, yet have better mental health outcomes. Whether such a paradox exists among black youth with a history of maltreatment is unclear. Professor Kysar-Moon will also discuss the role psychosocial resources play in post-hoc analyses for better mental health.
